Clinical Pastoral Education (CPE) is an experience based multi-faith professional education program for ministry. It brings theological lay people, theological students and ministers of all faiths into a supervised encounter with persons in crisis. Out of an intense involvement with persons in need, and the feedback from peers and supervisors, students develop new awareness of themselves as persons and of the needs of those to whom they minister.

Lenox Hill Hospital, a division of Northwell Health, provides a setting where the students enter into complex social, racial-ethnic, religious and administrative systems, and learn how to exercise a variety of pastoral functions within and relevant to those systems. The richness of the cultural and religious diversity at Lenox Hill Hospital is significant. LHH is on Manhattan's Upper East Side, easily reached by public transportation.
