NYU Langone Health is an academic, acute care hospital for the NYU School of Medicine. NYU has offered clinical pastoral education (CPE) since 1985 and CPE programs are currently offered at the Tisch-Kimmel Medical Center in Manhattan with additional site placements at NYU Langone- Brooklyn. CPE students have access to patients in acute and critical care situations. The CPE program has a depth of faculty who participate in the didactics as guest subject matter experts. Also, the program attracts a diversity of students from the numerous seminaries in the area and the many religious communities that are found in New York City. Within the Spiritual Care Department are chaplains of various religious backgrounds who provide opportunities for mentorship and further professional learning.

CPE students provide multi-faith spiritual care to diverse patients and their loved ones in the inpatient and outpatient setting. They work closely with interdisciplinary teams throughout the hospital to develop plans of care that contribute to the well-being of our patients. This direct service facilitates the application of learned theory/academia and personal/pastoral experiences as students' minister to patients, families and staff.

Clinical Pastoral Education (CPE) is experiential theological education designed to improve the quality of care offered by spiritual caregivers of all faiths and levels of experience. Our programs use a reflective practice model of learning that integrates components of direct spiritual care, personal and theological reflection, clinical supervision, peer review and supportive group process.
